

Rebel leader says Reds may put up own media

By Delfin T. Malina Jr.

MARSH CITY—Should Congress legislate media laws on the revolutionary movement, communist spokespersons Gergorio "Ya Baga" Bond said the insurgents would have no option but to put up their own underground media outlets.

"Like... no more broadcast radio stations and [the] publication of revolutionary newspapers, aside from the general interest regional news items," Bond said in a mobile phone interview. The Communist Party of the Philippines regularly publishes "Ang Bayan," the official news organ of the revolutionary movement.

On Friday the military said it was preparing to launch an operation against media organizations that disseminate "disinformation" to the proposed autonomous law.

Armed Forces of the Philippines deputy chief of staff Col. Edilberto Manalaysa suggested to impose the possible control of official media, AFP spokesman Lt. Col. Roderico "Roderico" Rodriguez said.

"This is an official topic of the Armed Forces" in the proposed autonomous law, Manalaysa said.

Bond in a statement said, "In protesting the intervention, the insurgent forces want to have revolutionary news from broadcasting their ideas. They want that the Filipino journalist be accepted in their 'journalist' with no questions asked."

Leftist groups also accused the military for intervention.

"The military aims to destroy the media. The law to implement is giving media organizations should be the mouthpiece of the government and military," Robert de Castro, Baguio House deputy secretary general, said in a statement.

For its part, the military's spokesman is warning. "We are warning the insurgents that any attempt to establish a media outlet in the provinces will be met with a strong response," AFP spokesman Rodriguez said.

Villar wants telcos probed on unused cell phone loads

MANILA—Villar is seeking a Senate inquiry into the legality of telecommunications firms' practice of forfeiting to their favor the unused amount of pre-paid cellular phone credit bought by their subscribers.

Villar, chair of the Senate committee on 5 states, has filed Senate Resolution 200 directing the committee on public services to open an inquiry into the "unused value forfeiture policy" adopted by a number of telecommunications carriers.

The policy, he said, could be a violation of Republic Act No. 7925, which provides that rates of telecom firms "must be fair, reflective of a fair return on their investments, reasonable and non-discriminatory."

"It does not attract attention that the value of pre-paid credit from phone subscribers may be lost or forfeited to the carriers' favor if they are not used by the subscribers," Villar said in a statement.

"It would like to know whether such policy or practice violates certain laws," he said. In his resolution, Villar cited the practice of telcos of putting a 10-day limit on the use of P300-discounted pre-paid credit and a 30-day limit on P200 to P1,000 pre-paid credit. Villar also cited the practice of telcos of putting a 10-day limit on the use of P300 credit, a 30-day limit on P500 credit, a 30-day limit on P1,000 credit, and a 30-day limit on P2,000 credit. Villar also cited the practice of telcos of putting a 10-day limit on the use of P300 credit, a 30-day limit on P500 credit, a 30-day limit on P1,000 credit, and a 30-day limit on P2,000 credit.

Villar said he found the issue that pre-paid credit "has been" especially for low-income earners.

Congress casualty of intra-chamber fight over budget

Source: Journal of the American Statistical Association, 93(463), 1031-1041.

From this perspective, the narrative has clearly been the beneficiary of the intra-party supervisory conflict.

The issue in this intra-chamber war does not revolve on differences over the House and Senate versions of the budget bill, but rather over the Senate bypass of the bicameral conference committee. The committee's function is to resolve the differences in the Senate and House versions of a bill.

The bypass thereby rendered redundant the bicameral conference, a hallmark of what we consider

The facts of this controversy are by now well known and their details need no repetition.

For the sake of levity, the senators have claimed that House members are up in arms because their alleged plumed raptors in their park haven't been killed by the bylaws.

On the other hand, House members have claimed that the Senate threatened the process after insisting its own deal with Mr. Arroyo by resigning the vote to the President's intelligence panel, to the summer push back, which had also been reduced.

Single chamber assembly

In anger, some 3000 members have rallied for the abolition of the Kurams and the conversion of the legislature's into a single chamber assembly, thereby removing the untimely call for the adoption of the parliamentary system, which is antithetical to the Kurams theory.

This will in itself be a manifestation of the modified minds that inhabit Congress.

Admission of Judiciary positions is a 10-week three-months of Congress hall at applicants at Judiciary hearings where department secretary and human director, who attend the congressmen, on boundaries and boundaries.

So, it is not surprising that members of the House are determined to abolish the Senate, which is co-equal with the House, by the legislature's own system of term-chambers (Judeo and Induano). Besides, they cannot devote attention with impu-

Unfortunately, this tactic which works as well on easily intimidated bureaucrats, has not worked with the senators, many of whom would look down on their lower-january fellows as a bunch of timid one-upsmen.

²⁷ In reality, there are quite a number of congressmen who give the lie to this popular observation.

Executive unscathed

In addition, chambers may, Congress is in recess while the President has occupied himself. At the same time, the Senate has given what he has wanted—passage of the budget with an up-to-date outlook rather than a worried budget due to overly active revenue programs designed to boost economic growth.

The Senate House squabble also reveals the malignancy of the sub-culture of applying the notion of checks and balances to the reverse—within the legislature and outside the framework of checks and balances among the executive, Congress and the Supreme Court.

In the lockkeeping, what is revealed is that within the corporate system, there exist a sub-layer in the legislative where efforts to to ensure stakeholders in lawmaking.

This potential for sidestepping gives the President the opportunity to use divide-and-rule tactics on Congress. The discord over the budget has provided ammunition to the argument that Congress has become dysfunctional and that strengthening executive power is the key to a government that delivers the goods.

Derivative

For this reason, the House and the Senate should stop their silly dispute that is distracting us both chambers.

The Senate action was reportedly motivated by the possibility of leaving a tight monetary budget since 2003, with its deleterious effects on the economy, and by the policy consideration that the senators feared the prospect of being denied their plans for Easter holiday break if the budget bill had to go through another tabled-off delay in the lawmakers' chamber.

The House had allegedly stalled the revenue committee reportedly because the lower chamber might use it as a bargaining venue for the construction of pork barrel bills, holding hostage the bill increasing the value-added tax, an income tax and

The controversy puts under the spotlight the flaws of the bi-municipal conference. It has been shown that in the case of the 2005 budgets, the conference has become the venue for horse-trading that should have taken place in the context of congressional hearings, the plenary debates, and the passage of bills, or even, and ideally in their final stages.

The passage in the Senate of the budget should not make the agency complacent that the passage of the bill increasing the VAT rate from 10 to 12 percent has been secured.

The bill will ensure solid the biannual conference where the home-crafting is found to suppress in a more vibrant there are a number of the future-discovery. It can easily be identified by their uncommon bond.

Keep price of rice within reach of poor, GMA orders NFA

WITH the country facing the more frequent petroleum price hikes, President Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday ordered the National Food Authority to make sure the price of its rice would remain at its present levels.

In a statement, the President ordered that NFA rice be sold at its current price of P14/kg for ordinary regular milled rice and P15/kg for special well-milled rice for the first half of the year.

Ms Arroyo also directed the NFA to ensure that government rice would be available to the public at all times at all of its accredited outlets nationwide.

"All available means must be explored to keep (rice) within the (reach) of the poor," the President said.

"A necessary" part of the funds to be generated by the new tax measures would be used to subsidize the price of rice, she said.

NFA officials yesterday said however the Philippines had bought 400,000 tons of rice for April-May delivery, with 200,000 tons coming from Vietnam.

The officials said the Philippines also bought 200,000 tons of 25 percent broken rice variety from Vietnamese suppliers at $204.47 (roughly P15,000) per ton, including cost and freight.

Trading firms Noble Grain and Thai Shagun Trading Co. Ltd. were contract to supply 20,000 tons each of the same variety of rice at $204.25 per ton and $203.51 per ton, respectively, business reported. (Christina G. Brundage/Reuters)

Fear drives long flight to Kenya from Darfur

C. Bryson Hull

UMA, Kenya—Fear belled Mohammed Osman's two-year, 10-km flight from Sudan's Darfur region to Kenya, but anger, he says, bring him home.

The farmer never imagined Kenya, to where thousands of fellow Sudanese in the south fled in a 21-year civil war, would be his taste of safety after raiders slaughtered part of his village in a separate conflict in western Sudan in November 2002.

But by foot, plane, train, truck and donkey, Ahmed and 21 friends and family crossed Sudan and arrived in Kakuma camp in northwestern Kenya, the dry desert home to 100,000 refugees from eight African countries.

Nearly 60 percent are Sudanese, but Ahmed's group makes up just over half of the 42,000 refugees in Kakuma, the Darfur crisis that pitted non-Arab rebels against Arab militias.

Nearly all the Sudanese in Kakuma fled the civil war in Sudan by southern Sudan.

"If I go back to Darfur, I will kill the Arabs. If I had power, I would go. We have power here," he said, standing in front of his home built a few weeks in Kakuma. Three, the last built of mud-hut complexes atop red-tinged sands.

"We did not want to come to Kenya. We did not know about it," Ahmed said.

Terror sparked his flight in November 2002, when marauding militiamen known as Janjaweed torched his north Darfur village, Masmaji, killing his two brothers, his parents, three nieces and dozens of neighbors.

"They came at night and burned the houses and they went back and shot anyone who ran away from the fire. They took children around the back and shot them," he said.

Ahmed, his wife and three children were out in their sorghum fields when the raiders came, and they only returned to their razed, lifeless village two days later.

They fled for nearby Habila but, warned of impending Janjaweed attacks, they moved again.

"I decided to go to Chad, because it was near, but the Janjaweed cut the way," he said.

Their next stops were the larger Darfur towns of El Fasher and Nyala, but a few months in each with no fields to tend left the farmer in Ahmed frustrated, and his family hungry.

He bought train tickets for Khartoum, looking to go to its squalid squatter camps. Police at the train station had different ideas. Ordered to give his reasons for traveling, Ahmed replied that there was war at home.

"The security said 'That is not the truth. You must go back to Darfur.'" Reuters

Tribal folk plead against mining

BY MICHAEL GOODMAN—After their representative was denounced among other best, learning to control and presented with various other issues on the mining issue in the country, indigenous people pleaded for help on their behalf.

"There is more than this, it is to be mining operations," they announced during the first national conference on mining held last month.

"The interests to be regulated are not in Malabon or in the DENR [Department of Environment and Natural Resources] but in our lands, on the very identity of the people," said the speaker.

Representatives applied to the DENR for a permit to open a new mining area in the province of Benguet, which is a mining area in the country.

"It is not our practice to mine because we are not a mining area," said the speaker. "We are not a mining area, we are a people."

In Malabon, thousands of people are protesting against the DENR's decision to open a new mining area in the province of Benguet, which is a mining area in the country.

Sectors boost tree planting drive by mining company

MANILA, South Cotabato—A tree planting drive spearheaded by a mining company got under way Friday when about 400 representatives of various sectors joined the drive.

The project, dubbed "Mabuhay sa Ilog," a "Mabuhay" plan to "let us plant," aims to restore the Mabuhay of the area.

On Jan. 24, representatives from the DENR, the Department of Environment and Natural Resources in South Cotabato, and the Department of Environment and Natural Resources in South Cotabato joined the drive.

Starfish destroying coral reefs in S. Leyte alarms gov

By Jack Beardsley

PHILIPPINE NEWS

MANILA (UPI)—The Philippine government has sought the help of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources and the Coast Guard to stop the destruction of coral reefs in the Sulu Sea, where starfish are eating the coral.

Gov. Romeo Lim said the problem should be addressed immediately since the affected area had been open since 1990. Gov. Lim said the starfish are eating the coral reefs in the Sulu Sea, where starfish are eating the coral.

The coral reefs are considered among the most valuable in the world. The Coast Guard is now patrolling the area to prevent the starfish from eating the coral reefs in the Sulu Sea, where starfish are eating the coral.

The outbreak of crown-of-thorns starfish is already damaging at least one location of coral reefs surrounding the Sulu Sea and has threatened to gobble up other coral reefs in the area if not taken care of soon, according to the Philippine government.

'Minsan Pa,' Cesar, Ara top Golden Screen winners

By Maureen R. Cruz

THE ENTERTAINMENT Press Awards ceremony, held last night at the Manila Convention Center, was a night of triumph for two independently produced films, "Minsan Pa" and "Tanghays sa Balin," by featuring them among the top winners of the contest.

In the second Golden Screen awards ceremony at the RSCC Plaza in Makati City, "Minsan Pa," an atmospheric, low-budget film of a Calabar town (Joaquin "Jhoan") and a Calabar town (Jhoan), topped the awards, including the highly coveted Best Picture Award.

Jeffrey Jeturian was named as best director for his work on "Minsan Pa," while Jody Lee and Ara Mina, who plays Jhoan's wife, were named best supporting actors.

The award from Ego was given to the film, after being named the best film of the year by the Metro Manila Film Festival. "Minsan Pa" had to make it to the 20th Metro

Manila Film Festival's week of eight events, to produce the film. "Minsan Pa" was featured with a best original screenplay award that night, while Jody Lee's performance in "Minsan Pa," supported by Jeturian, was named best supporting actor.

The best actor trophy was awarded to Cesar Montano for his work in "Tanghays sa Balin," a romantic story in the style of classic cinema. The film was made entirely in Calabar, with Jody Lee's primary role as a bride.

"Tanghays sa Balin" was the best film of the year, as well as the best award-winning film from the Metro Manila Film Festival.

Man shot dead in Makati bar

A YOUNG man was shot dead in the parking lot of a popular bar in Makati City early Sunday morning.

Sgt. Alejandro of the Makati Police homicide section identified the victim as Arsenio Morales, 28, single, of Sanitosa Road, Quezon City, who stepped out of the Purple Bar along Figueroa St. around 3:45 a.m.

Police ruled out any motive in the murder by killing an innocent in the scene suggested. Morales, who was shot once in the chest at close range, still had time to utter a few words of protest when he was shot. A gunshot wound from inside the bar, two spent shells from a .38 caliber pistol were later found nearby.

At press time, the police have not identified anyone in the killing but are pursuing leads.

Payatas: From dump to model housing

By D.J. Tap

TURN a good idea to improve and dump a load of goodwill and what used to be notorious for garbage would be known for gold... Areas of gold, that is.

Plans are about to convert a portion of the dump in Quezon City into a model community of self-help folk who own their homes.

Quezon City Mayor Feliciano Belmonte Jr. has signed a memorandum of understanding for the "Payatas Social Project," a housing program for 10,000 people in Barangay Payatas.

Some P80 low-cost houses would be built on a 7.3-hectare property near the place where garbage bins accumulate at night.

Private sector funding

Each house would cost around P70,000 and would be funded by the private sector.

The project was made possible through the donation by Madrid-based architect Delfo Comandó

Madrid of the property to the Quezon City government.

Once completed, the housing project would transform the Payatas area into a model community with basic amenities such as a community center, a school, a church, a community center and recreational facilities.

The Quezon City government would provide the development of the neighborhood of equal participants in the selection of the project beneficiaries.

Ramón Aguirre, head of the city's urban poor affairs office, said priority would be given to families living along the danger zone of the dumpsite.

The danger zone includes fringes of the mountains of garbage, which are in constant danger of collapsing and harming hundreds of workers.

July 2008 avalanche

On July 18, 2008, a wall of garbage fell on about 100 workers in the Payatas dumpsite on the eastern side of the dump.

More than 224 people were killed and about 674 families had to be relocated.

The accident also has since been closed and repaired with aid as part of the city government's efforts to undertake the area.

The next development is the building of a P12-million methane gas plant that produces city gas products and disposal of methane gas in power 2,000 households.

The power plant may even be tapped to supply electricity to the new housing project.

The Madrid Foundation would provide the funding requirements for the development of the housing project, which would be built in cooperation with partners from the private sector.

Other partner agencies in the project are Habitat for Humanity Philippines Foundation Inc., Ayala Land, Mahat Development Corp., BSM Construction and Development Corp., and the long-running Payatas Parish under the Novedades Church.

A voyeur's ballet, anyone?

By Joyce C. Matlo

A COLLABORATION of great Filipino music and original Balala-Philippines dance choreography is one to cherish: music and dance enthusiasts in BP's land offering this season.

The two-night event will be on March 11 and 12 at the Cultural Center of the Philippines and 9 p.m.

BP's "New Filipino Rising: What is Next?" exhibition is a treasure of contemporary dance choreographed by composers from Cebu's 2004 Institute of Arts (Cebu Filipino Love Song) and his own collection of Philippine folk songs "Songs of the Islands."

Both compilations will be performed by the San Miguel Philippine Music Orchestra.

"When Balala-Philippines approached me to ask if they could dance 'The Great Filipino Love Song' I reacted with the archaic 'No, I said No, and why don't we push it further by collaborating and performing the music live with the orchestra to make it more exciting," Capistrano said in a letter.

"I also let them listen to this CD which I was working on; one direction is rearrangement of 18 great folk songs like 'New Love Song,' 'Natalang,' 'Mabait,' 'Oh Pilosopo,' 'Kailangan pa lang' and I let them hear it, and they wanted to do it now," he added.

According to the company, this collaboration with Balala-Philippines will also promote Capistrano's process and promote Filipino music.

"Musical music is very important to build upon what has been said in the past, by making it more accessible, deniable and popular, moving to its living generation of Filipinos. We will be using it for what the orchestra and with a dance act," Capistrano said.

BP artist director Benjamin Chanon III said this presentation would have a distinctive style to represent the audience's interest and make them a part of the evening's production.

"Part of the look of the show is separation. You will see the

Baguio school renovated

ON MARCH 12, President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo and US Ambassador Francis Ricciardone will inaugurate the restored Ragala Central School, the second heritage schoolhouse to be rescued by the Heritage Conservation Society (HCS) for the Heritage Schoolhouse Program of the Department of Education.

Bugatti Central School has quite a history. Legend has it that the early American colonial era by a teacher from the American military, the school originally had 25 students holding classes in one room of the house of Blaise Imbottino, Maria Carillo, one of the founding mothers of Bugatti.

The school moved in 1981 to another home where the present method home studio is expanded into an industrial school where American teachers taught livelihood trades like blacksmithing. The school moved once again. This time it located in a new, handsome building, a dormitory and a main hall kitchen building on a small campus that had a natural swimming hole in a ravine.

The present school (built in 1923) shares a hill with the City Hall overlooking historic Burnham Park, Seward's Park, and Seward Central School has one of the best views of Burnham.

Originally filled out with 11 classrooms, the two-story building was originally not awarded concrete and Reagin paid, via simple architecture, to show that of its neighbor, the Reagin City Hall, including the two-story entrance at the center of each building serving as a main entrance.

Endorsed by American banking in 1940, the building was rebuilt in 1946 and although it has been in use since then, it fell victim to the usual post-war maintenance that most government buildings suffer from.

There were many origins dating the varnished, painted. Seventh, hollow, modern floor covering were the original wide floorboards of thick tongue-and-groove joined by solid pine floor joists, would no longer available these days and worth a fir-turned out to be handcrafted out of Bengali pine wood, hidden from view by thick layers of paint.

The most interesting discovery was that the exterior walls of the second floor were also of pine planks, covered over with water-repellent or peasy. Due to the deteriorated condition of most of the wall-planks, there could no longer

The learned school recognizes its historic assistance while being faced on with modern requirements such as glass panes to make classrooms visible from the corridors, instant study sitting and an upgraded auditorium for small presentations. The business was designed to provide four additional classrooms.

The restored school is painted in the green and-white color scheme associated with Japanese houses dating from the city's Japanese days as the American colonial HRG Service Unit was once the Philippines' common enemy.

A PHOTOGRAPH of the Baguio Central School shows how the building originally looked.

THE ORIGINAL, budget glass floorboards are exposed once again in this restored classroom.

THE BUILDING's triple balconies are restored.

Baguio school renovated

By Benji S. Dela Cruz

There are many similarities between Baguio Central School and Baguio Central School. One is located in Baguio City, the other is located in Baguio City.

Both schools were brought back to their original appearance and design. Both were also fitted out with the latest teaching aids and equipment.

Just a few minutes

At just 8 km, the building's ground floor was fitted out with administrative offices plus additional classrooms, a music room and a space of the surrounding area. On the second floor is a large library whose wood-paneled windows create an glowing sunlight. It also has a lot of glass windows and floor-level ventilation shade system to allow natural ventilation to keep the air fresh and healthy.

School principals from Baguio Occidental province who attended the inauguration of the restored structure were amazed by the architectural grandeur of the 1902 building, the modernity of its interior spaces, and its continued appreciation for modern characteristics.

Baguio Central School is a historic structure and an example of living heritage. It provides a working example of heritage in the region. It proves that the educational system and the people have been in continuous service in the province with the highest standards since the early 1900s. Many lives, vibrant in history, living in the restored school house demonstrate.

Historical schoolhouses from the 1900-1940 period are testimony to a rich American contribution to the Philippines, the establishment of a historically significant educational system available in all Philippines.

Old schoolhouses, many in disrepair or abandoned, are an integral part of additional development currently needed by the public school system. In response to that lack, the main thrust of the Heritage Schoolhouse Program is to restore historic schoolhouses for use as modern educational facilities.

The Joint World School shows the extent of the progress in introducing the value of heritage and its relevance to modern living. From all sources reports received, school administration and teachers are enthusiastic to begin building themselves into the restored Baguio Central School.

With awareness is vital for the preservation of heritage. Therefore the HCS always involves student appreciation and provides hands-on experience learning in the different aspects of conservation. Some universities, the UP College of Architecture for example, give academic credit for the apprenticeship. Students volunteer their services for labor and helping teams are provided for the work.

HCS facilities who are qualified conservation practitioners volunteer to lead and assist the voluntary teams of students to carry out preliminary field research before renovation.

Once conservation goes beyond the architectural aspect, history students research on the individual buildings, environmental planners look at the urban context of heritage structures, and students of economics, sociology, literature and the other disciplines also take part in the research.

Technical conservation requires specialized knowledge in construction, architecture and conservation planning, engineering services are conducted from professional conservation specialists.
